

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

The current invention describes a tool for mixing natural peanut butter, when the peanut butter has separated into an oily layer and a sedimentary layer.

Traditional peanut butter spreaders are generally made of soft materials, such as plastic, and don't have the structural strength to mix the separated peanut butter, especially when the peanut butter is refrigerated. The current invention overcomes that by utilizing a handle, a rigid metal shaft and a inflexible metal mixing blade.